Not illustrated. 1846 Excerpt: .from an historical point of view He has judged him as he might if he was living his next door neighbor and finds him a gigantic impersonation of conceit; as if, forsooth, he had himself invented all that tremendous machinery of hell pains and purgatory--the remorseless system of pains and penalties of the Inferno. This is not a subject, however, to be discussed in a paragraph: it is worthy of a full and mature examination. The evidence of Hunt tells truth somewhere, and though it may be unjust to Dante, may be true to this generation. With Ariosto, Tasso and Boiardo, Hunt is on ground more congenial to him. This work, we predict, will long be a standard and be read like Johnson s Lives of the English Poets. It is impossible here even to speak briefly of the successive volumes of the Library of Choice...
