Excerpt: .playing upon his harp in view of a city in flames---a circumstance history has Christian, basking in the serenity of his own beliefs and hobbies, but deaf to the calls of charity and sympathy from a world perishing and dying at his feet. justly execrated--a less frightful picture than that of the Mr. Orr frequently called to see Miss Chippety, as well as Lena and Helen Ray; sometimes Paul was present on their visits, but oftener not; for he was forced to toil industriously to obtain the necessary means of living. He never faltered a moment in his labors, nor complained of their irksomeness; for he had now thoroughly mastered the lesson that duty was to be preferred to selfish aims and objects, even if these were the dearest aspirations of life.-From what he had already learned, he had faith God would attend to...
