Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from On the Necessity for Defenses on Coast and at Sea: Speech of Hon. Samuel S. Cox, of New York, in the House of Representatives, Monday, June 30, 1884 He says: The maritime power of England originated in the commercial wants of the people and become identified with them step by step in their national progress. What service I could render in this House on naval matters has been, first, with a view to strengthen our merchant marine, adapting it to the progress of the world in mold and materials; second, to provide defense upon our coasts by means of great guns of a caliber suited to that purpose and at least equal to the quality and kind of guns now used by other nations. I am aware that all the pride of our early achievements on the sea and all the shame of our present deplorable condition have aroused a dormant national feeling in reference to both these subjects. The question that confronts the legislation of this Congress is: How far can we go in the rehabilitation of the defenses of the country, either by fortifications and guns or by iron-clad war ships and cruisers? No Urgent Need of a Navy. We are told that there is urgent need of a navy. I do not admit the urgency, unless it be found in the maxim, In time of peace prepare for war. Our peculiar situation renders this semi-barbarous maxim less applicable to the United States than to any other of the great powers of the world. Were we to be embroiled in warfare with, any one or more of these powers they must come here...
